

Thank you for clicking Donate to PAL we are delighted that you are interested in helping us, to help people of all ages make the best work of their lives.

We are just in the process of setting up our Just Giving page, once this is up and running it will be even easier for you to make a donation. But in the meantime you can still donate the old fashioned way!

At the moment we have several Lab projects in development here is information about two of them;

1. If Not You Who Else? 2

During the summer of 2011, when riots across England hit the headlines Juan Toledo and Cathy Berezniaki worked with 16 young people from across London to develop projects focused on art for social change. Many of these young people were not in education or employment but they were hungry for change. The INYWE? Lab supported these young people to engage in critical debate about making positive change happen in their communities.

The Lab participants developed leadership skills, presentation skills and developed project proposals which they presented to Local Authority Officers. Some of the young participants have now embarked on setting up their own businesses and others are working with young people in schools to help raise aspirations amongst local youth. PAL would like to run another INYWE? Lab, to help more young people make a positive contribution to their community and beyond.

2. Ritual and Tradition, Lost and Found : an exploration of Ritual and tradition through the medium of spoken word theatre.

Jacob Sam-La Rose, Poet and PAL Lab Director plans to bring together 20 artists, working in different art forms to explore the spaces left behind from cultural practices once observed by generations before us. Using the medium of spoken word theatre older established artists (the eldest in his 80's) will be invited to collaborate with younger emerging talent connecting generations of artists working across a continuum of black arts.

By investigating complex working relationships between text, movement, music, and other art forms, participants will explore how new rituals and traditions might be authored, practiced and shared.

If you want to know more about our work before making a donation please do not hesitate to contact us, we would be happy to tell you about our other exciting projects currently in the PAL incubator.
